Android 2. 3 games free for mobile

There are many great games available for Android, but how can you choose gems from dross, and an amazing touchscreen experience from a failed console port? With our list, that's how! We include the best titles on Android today, including best racers, puzzlers, adventure games, arcade titles, and more. We've tried these games, and look to see where the entrance fee is – there may be free stickers added to some of these on the Google Play Store, but sometimes you'll need an in-app purchase (IAP) to get real benefits – so we'll make sure you know about it before download. Check back every month for new games, and click to the following page to see the best of the best divided into genres that best represent what people are playing now. Android game of the month: Ord. (Image credit: Crescent Moon Games) ($1.99/£1.89/AU$3.09) Ord. it has roots in classic text adventures and game books, but strips these sources to the bone. Instead of plot in or even full sentence, you are faced with one word and two more words representing the choice. Select one and you are served the result, which determines your next step. That may sound gimmicky - and to some extent - but there are nuances and atmospheres to be found in the small set of stories provided. During the play, one left us in a terrible circle as we were desperate to escape. Others offer sweet and satisfying conclusions after a complicated ordeal. Or maybe we fill in the blanks. You can't help but do it when the narrative is minimal. Ord. are wonderful things, though – smart, affecting, intelligent and playable, despite brevity(intentional). The best racing games for Android Our favorite Android top-down, 3D and retro racers. (Image credit: Playrise Digital Ltd) Tabletop Racing: World Tour ($5.99/£4.79/AU$8.99) Table Top Racing: World Tour is a high-speed racer that makes you guide a small car around a circuit made of relatively large household objects. It's like the descendants of Micro Machines and Mario Karts. Race very competitively, and find you fend off crazy opponents by means of cunning maneuvers and unsportsmanlike weapons, in a crazy dash to the finish line. While there are opportunities to upgrade your vehicle to better compete on more difficult tracks, the World Tour is without iap. Instead, it's your skill that will see you pick up the checkered flag - and end up with enough cash to buy a fancy new car. With simple yet responsive controls, this Android game breathes fresh air on a platform where arcade racing is often as much about the depth of your wallet as your skills on the track. (Image credit: Interactive) GRID Autosport ($9.99/£9.99/AU$14.99) GRID Autosport is a racer, but it's also a challenge for Android gamers complaining they never get premium titles, and that freemium rates come with advertising and IAP. This is a complete ad-free premium AAA hit, transferred intact to your phone (assuming your phone can run it – see the list in Google games page). Even on PCs and consoles, GRID Autosport is an impressive thing on its release. Five years or so, it's no less astounding as a mobile title, because you turn on about 100 circuits, fighting with a wide variety of cars. It's, the notes, the simulations. It won't run easy on you, or allow you to smash walls at high speed and carry on as if nothing had happened, but the driving aids help you master what is without a doubt the best premium racing experience on Android. (Image credit: Pixelbite) Repulze($1.49/£1.59/AU$2.39) Repulze exists in the future beyond drivers who drive too fast, instead, they are placed in experimental hovercraft that belt together at crazy speeds. The tradition of track design has also been discarded, flat courses replaced by roller-coaster-like constructions that throw you around in a stomach-churning way. The game is divided into three phases. It starts with a time trial that gets you through a certain colored gate, and ends with you facing an AI opponent, sometimes - and unsportsmanlike - blowing it up with a weapon. There's a sci-fi backstory about men and synthetic companies, but really this one is all about speed. At first, the nervous controls will find you repeatedly crashing into the trackside and wondering if someone should take your hovercraft license. But master the same tracks and controls, and Repulze becomes an exhilarating experience as you bomb towards the finish line. Rush Rally 3($3.99/£3.99/AU$6.99)Rush Rally 3 brings console-style rally racing to Android. For a quick blast, you can learn a single rally mode, with co-drivers beeping in your ears; or there's a metal grinding rallycross, pitting you against a computer car apparently triggered by aggression. If you're in it for the long haul, immerse yourself in full career mode. None of that choice would be a problem if the race wasn't up to much. Luckily, it was really good. The game looks partly, with very clever visuals and points of view, whether it's hilling around a racing circuit or blazing through the woods. The controls also work well, providing a number of settings to accommodate a variety of preferences (tilts; virtual buttons) - and skill levels. Overall, it was enough for the game to get the coveted checkered flag. Horizon Chase (free + $2.99 / £2.79 / AU $ 4.09 IAP)If you're fed up with racing games that pay more attention to whether asphalt looks photorealistic than how much fun it has to zoom together at crazy speeds, check out Horizon Chase. This homage to jada's arcade title is about sheer race excitement, rather than boring realism. The visuals are vibrant, the soundtrack is jolly and and racing finds you constantly striving towards the front of aggressive packages. If you really remember the Lotus Turbo Esprit Challenge and Top Gear, don't miss this one. (Note that Horizon Chase gives you five tracks for free. To unlock the rest, there is one IAP £2.29/US$2.99.) The Need for Speed: Most Wanted expect the roaming free racing type of the console version of this title to be stiff, but Need for Speed: Most Wanted remains one of the best games of its kind on Android. Yes, the track is linear, with just a strange shortcut, but a bit of a race that's actually amazing. You're busy along the city's boring, grey rundown streets, trying to win events that will boost your ego and reputation. Winning swells your puns, allowing you to buy a new vehicle to enter a special event. The game looks beautiful on Android and has a high-octane soundtrack to urge you and beyond. But mostly, this one's about control - a slick combination of responsive slope and easy drifting that makes it all feel closer to OutRun 2 than the typically sub-optimal mobile racing fare. RIPTIDE GP: Renegade ($2.99/£2.99/AU$3.99)The first two Riptide games have you zooming along a windsy, undulating circuit surrounded by shimmering metal towers. RIPTIDE GP: Renegade offers another splashy futuristic racing piece, but this time it finds you immersed in the underbelly seedy sport. Like previous games, you're still trialing hydrofoils, and the race not only involves going very, very fast, but also being a massive show-off at every available opportunity. If you hit a ramp or wave that throws you into the air, you'd better throw your way or do a handstand, to get a turbo-boost upon landing. Sensible drivers get nothing. Career mode finds you earning cash, improving your journey, and perhaps ignoring the slightly tiring bits of the story. However, the race is amazing – a fun mix of old jad jad arcade sensations and modern mobile touchscreen intelligence. Mini Motor Racing ($2.99/£3.19/AU$4.49) Mini Motor Racing is a frenetic top-down racer who finds small vehicles daring about tight circuits that twist and turn in an apparent attempt to make you repeatedly drive against walls. The cars handle more like remote control cars than real fares, meaning that races are usually tight - and easily lost if you glance away from the screen for just a moment. There's a lot of content here – many dozens of races are located in different neighborhoods. You zoom in on the ruins, and shift about the beachside tracks. Ai is sometimes a bit too aggressive, but with smart car upgrades, and the use of nitro boosts during races, you'll pick up more than the occasional checkered flag. Need for Speed: Hot Pursuit ($4.99/£4.99/AU$7.99)The Need for Speed: Hot Pursuit exists in a world where police seem to think it's okay to use their very expensive car to ram criminals who escape into surrender. And when not doing that, they were busy along the way, racing each other to (probably) decide who paid for the doughnut that day. It's a fairly simple racer - you basically weave your way through the landscape, crash into other cars, and trigger strange traps - but it's the exhilarating, breezy fun that echoes classic racers like Chase H.Q.And once you fill you you up one of the nitro-happy fuzz, you can play a career as pursued as well, stuck into the kind of police-destroying criminal antics that really won't be covered by your car manufacturer's warranty. Final Freeway 2R ($0.99/79p/AU$0.99)Final Freeway 2R is a retro racing game, quite blatantly inspired by Sega's classic OutRun. You belt along in a red car, tearing up the road where everyone is kinda suspicious driving in the same direction. Wrong and again, you hit a fork, allowing you to choose your route. Meanwhile, cheesy music blaring from your device's speakers. For the old hand, you will be in a kind of paradise game. And arguably, this game is better than what inspired it, feeling more fluid and nuanced. If you're used to more realistic fares, try the Final Freeway 2R - you may feel converted by its breezy attitude, colorful visuals and the need for truly crazy speeds. Motorsport Manager Mobile 3 ($3.99 / £3.99 / AU $ 6.49) Motorsport Manager Mobile 3 is a racing management game without the boring bits. Instead of sitting you in front of a glorified spreadsheet, the game is a balanced mix of accessibility and depth, allowing you to learn team nitty gritty, sponsorship, mechanics and even livery. When you're ready, you can watch a surprisingly tense and exciting top-down race. (This is surprising because you mostly watch numbered disks zooming around the circuit.) One-off races give you a feel for things, but the real meat starts at the bottom of the pile in career mode, with the ultimate goal of being a winner. Everything is sleek, slick and mobile-friendly, and a big leap from the relatively simple original Motorsport Manager Mobile. Mobile.
